How the People Are Fooled

Henry Gardner and six other Republican senators voted the other day against the direct election of United States senators by the people. Senator Gardner was Republican state chairman last fall, conducting a political campaign on the platform promises of his party. He and the other six senators were pledged by their party platform to pass a resolution favoring direct election of United States senators.

In this age of political unrest, it cannot be regarded as safe for any political party to make promises to catch votes and then break the promises to fool the voters.
